HAWAII DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH INVITES PUBLIC COMMENTS ON DRAFT WATER QUALITY PLAN

*Public Information Meeting on Oahu Sept. 16

Finding solutions to address the state's most daunting water quality issues is not an easy task, but the Hawaii Department of Health (DOH), in collaboration with federal and county government agencies, has taken on the challenge and has prepared a comprehensive water quality draft plan for the public's input.

Hawaii DOH is holding an information meeting and is inviting the public to comment on the plan as part of the next stage in the plan's development. The draft plan can be viewed and downloaded at:

"We were tasked with a huge responsibility to protect Hawaii's water to meet the needs of Hawaii's nearly 1.3 million residents, visitors to our islands, and local businesses, including farms and other agricultural lands," said Gary Gill, deputy director of environmental health. "We approached this major undertaking by looking at existing and emerging issues against a backdrop of new federal regulations and changes in sea and weather patterns."

"With heightened attention on water quality today, this is by far one of the most definitive documents that will guide where we focus our attention and how we allocate our resources as a state. Ultimately, the plan will also inform statewide policy decisions," he added.

As part of the draft plan, the Hawaii DOH conducted a self-assessment of its own capabilities. The DOH's introspection resulted in plans for streamlined coordination and decision-making between the Clean Water Branch, the Safe Drinking Water Branch and the Wastewater Branch. Each of these branches oversees different aspects of water quality under the DOH.

The comment period on the Draft Water Quality Plan closes at 5 p.m. (HST) on Friday, Oct. 17, 2014.

The State Water Quality Plan is a crucial part of an integrated and coordinated program for the protection, conservation, and management of waters in the State of Hawaii. It is intended to promote and implement the proper conservation and development of the State's waters. The water quality plan describes ongoing work and future initiatives to protect and improve the State's water quality and is an important part of developing effective linkages between inter-agency programs.
