

In a public health emergency, the ability to remain open for business is critical to your company's survival.

A good continuity of operations plan starts with safeguarding the health of your employees, and the health and safety of their families.

However, distributing these medicines to the entire populace will be challenging.

Businesses may have the opportunity to participate in the Hawai'i Department of Health's "Closed Points of Distribution" program.

NATURAL DISASTERS

INFLUENZA

BIOTERRORISM

PANDEMIC DISEASE

INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENTS

RADIATION SPILLS

Closed PODS give your company direct access to emergency medicines in a disaster – enough for all employees and their families – to help ensure that your staff stay healthy, able to show up for work, and aren't worried about their families at home.

CDC has created a Strategic National Stockpile of pharmaceuticals and antidotes to protect the American public in the event of a natural disaster or bioterror attack.

This cache can be sent quickly to any state if local hospitals and pharmacies will not have enough medical countermeasures to meet the general public's demand.

Find out more about how Closed PODs can benefit your company's resilience to disaster, and stay open for business.
